

- Herbal medicine is increasingly used worldwide and is in need of real-world evidence to answer various safety concerns regarding the concomitant use of herbal medicine and conventional drugs.
- Multiple observational studies on herb-drug interactions are reviewed along with the strengths and limitations of the data sources and study design used.
- Future directions in terms of novel study designs and approaches are discussed.