

Highlights

- Fluorescent nanomaterials including metal-based quantum dots, carbon dots, graphene quantum dots and metal nanoclusters were summarized.
- Fluorescence sensors based on nanomaterials for food pollutants detection were discussed.
- The selected higher toxic food pollutants including mycotoxins, foodborne pathogens, pesticide residues, antibiotic residues, and heavy metal ions.